MISCELLANEOUS READING. TO JOB'S COMFORTERS EVERYWHERE

"Clouds have silver linings," Thus the poet sings, To stifle vain repinings, And silence murmurings; But in the clouds above me No "silver" do I see:

Now, Poet, "an' you love me"

Prithee! show it unto me! The words that you have spoken Perhaps are very true; Yet until the cloud is broken, And the sunlight peepeth through, This thought of "silver linings," But awakens fresh repinings, For you must surely see, sir, Though truthful you may be, sir,

And the bright side is for you. Even were its lining golden, If it may not be beholden, Pray tell me, Mr. Poet, Is it comforting to know it, Unless you mean to show it!

That the dark side is for me, sir,

Your well meant information Has naught of consolation; For the sky is none the brighter Nor the cloud a shade the lighter, Unto me; From knowing that behind it-

If I can ever find it-There may be A sun that shines forever But which I alas! may never Chance to see.

So dark the cloud that hovers In my sky to-night, I cannot think it covers A single gleam of light; Now prove your aphorism-If such, indeed, it be-Dispel my scepticism, Or prate no more to me; To drive away each shade or doubt,

Pray turn the dark cloud inside out. CHASING A HAT.

The Worcester Bay State draws the following life-like picture of dignity chasing a hat. It is capital:—"By the way, what is there so derogatory to dignity as chasing a hat? We saw a gentleman proceeding up street the other day in a most magnificent manner. A beautiful stove-pipe, "Leary," and an awful dignity sat on his brow. Had he been in the interior of Africa he would have been set up for a Deity, hat and all. The wind is no respecter of persons. It caught beneath the well-turned brim of the "Leary." Magnificence felt it going, and tried to prevent it with both hands. But 'tras gone. Away over the curb-stones, gutters and pavements it flew, on crown and brim. Magnificence immediately gave chase. Did you ever see the grave with which a dignified individual tries to run? A sort of genteel skip and a polished 3,530 hop. Once or twice his hand was almost up-2,000 on it; but fresh breezes wafted it away. At 1,500 last it met a horse drawing a job wagon, 1,000 dodged beneath the animal's fore feet, but was arrested by one of his hind feet striking 300 plump into it. With this novel shoe the beast made a few rods, when a vigorous kick sent it flying over the driver's head, and is fell into the street a mis-shapen thing, with a ventilator in it, the size of a borse's boof .-Then it was that Magnificence stood still and
